PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

The Petitioner, David R. Scott, respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in this cause.

OPINION BELOW

The Opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit is attached hereto as Exhibit "A". The Order of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit denying the Petition for Rehearing on November 15, 1979 is attached hereto as Exhibit "B".

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered November 15, 1979. In view of the rules of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, no petition for rehearing was filed. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Title 28 U.S.C., Section 1254(1).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether the District Court erred in overruling Petitioner Scott's Motion for Judgment of Acquittal on count 2 of the indictment, as the evidence was insufficient—or in the alternative, there was no evidence—to prove a conspiracy as alleged in the indictment.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION INVOLVED

The Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution provides in part as follows:

> "No person shall. . .be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. . ."

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioner Scott was convicted of conspiring with James E. Brown to knowingly and unlawfully commit offenses against the United States in violation of Section 844(i), Title 18, U.S. Code, to wit, conspiracy to damage and destroy a certain building at Wills Point, Texas. The Court sentenced Petitioner to four years confinement in prison.

The Government's evidence shows that Petitioner Scott and Brown joined in purchasing a grocery store in Wills Point for about $99,990.00 in December, 1975 and thereafter took out insurance in an adequate and proper amount. Petitioner Scott operated the store and hired a manager to assist.

Throughout the next several years, there was a cash flow problem but the business was continually open for business and was profitable.

In May, 1976 an individual named Scott, Jr. was approached by Petitioner Scott regarding the purchase of dynamite and when he referred Petitioner to a local J.P., Petitioner stated he wanted untraceable dynamite to blow up a place the size of a building. Shortly thereafter, Scott, Jr. approached Petitioner Scott and suggested that he could get the dynamite but Petitioner stated he did not need it anymore. Within three weeks of that conversation another grocery store was blown up in the same vicinity but no connection was made between Petitioner and that transaction. The building Petitioner had in mind was never identified other than as to size. Scott stated that Petitioner and Brown were seen together immediately before the conversation regarding the dynamite.

Charles E. Wernette, a special agent with the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, investigated the bombing of a Brookshire's Grocery Store in the area and thereafter met Brown on July 20, 1976 at Canton Motor Company where he talked about the purchase of various merchandise. On July 21 and 22, 1976, Brown and Wernette met again and Brown asked if he had access to explosives or dynamite and possibly someone to use them. Wernette replied that he could probably come up with explosives and someone to use them. On July 23, 1976, Wernette called Brown at Canton, which was recorded and told Brown he had been in contact with a man who might be able to help Brown but the man wanted to know more. Brown told Wernette that it would be a "place", at a figure of about $5,000.00 involving a small town operation (SF 235-239). On August 3, 1976, Wernette talked to Brown again at Denney's Restaurant in Dallas. Wernette told Brown he had talked to his contact and Brown replied

"the boom deal?". Wernette said yes and Brown emphasized this would have to be done at a certain time under certain conditions and that it was going to be an insurance deal and that the place may be transferred. Brown said it was a very small town with about 3,000 population and the building would be about 6,000 square feet, the same building Wernette would see the next day. Brown described the construction of the building and stated that it would not burn and that the job should be done and completed probably in a month and a half and Brown and Scott were in the process of selling the business (SF 245-247). Brown said that if he was going to dynamite the store, he would use six sticks of dynamite, three down each side of the inside; and there would be very little police problem as there was only one officer on duty at night (SF 247,248). A dynamite man could come in about 7:20 p.m. or so before closing time, wait in the back of the store until it closed and then do whatever he was going to do and leave (SF 249). Brown told Wernette that there wasn't any particular point in mentioning any of this around Scott, that whatever was alright with Brown was alright with Scott and vice versa (SF 249).

On August 5, 1976, Wernette called Brown and Brown asked regarding Wernette's license plates which he had checked and were part of a block sold to law enforcement authorities (SF 252).

On August 8, 1976, a Sunday, Wernette met Brown at Canton and drove to a country club. Brown again brought up the license plates. Brown said he had an older man who would check out Wernette's contact to see if he knew what he was doing (SF 255,256). On August 11, 1976, Wernette called Brown and Brown said the deal was getting a little stronger, possibly. He said his partner would be in the store before 7:30 and that he could tell Wernette about the deal. Brown said he would like to be at the store to show Wernette and his contact around (SF 259-260).

On August 13, 1976, Wernette and special agent Bowers (the supposed explosives expert) met Brown at Canton, Brown immediately referred to the previous arrangements then when introduced to Bowers told Bowers he wanted the building totaled, flat level to the ground (SF 263,264). After some discussion with Bowers for arrangements for paying for the explosives and obtaining them, Brown directed Wernette and Bowers to the store, telling them that they would know the man to see at the store. Wernette and Bowers went to the grocery store at Wills Point, met Petitioner Scott in an office area inside the front door, and greeted one another. Scott said he was expecting them, that Brown told him they were coming. Scott showed both through the entire store and out into the back and into the alley. Nothing was ever said about explosives by Petitioner Scott (SF 266-268). They talked about construction of the store only but the substance of the entire conversation with Scott was the same as one which would have been conducted with a purchaser of a building (SF 292). They did not know if Brown had told Petitioner Scott that these men were interested in buying the building (SF 292). Before going to the store, Brown had told them it should be done on a Saturday or Sunday night, because it would be more profitable (SF 269).

On August 16, 1976, Wernette called Brown and there was a conversation regarding Bowers producing the explosives and Brown reimbursing him for the expenses entailed. (SF 271).

On August 23, 1976, Wernette, Bowers, and Petitioner Scott met at Denney's. When they showed Petitioner Scott some military composition C-4 and dynamite and blasting caps, Petitioner Scott said he did not know what it was and when referred to Brown's conversation Petitioner Scott said that he was not following them and denied knowing anything about any plan to blow any store up in Wills Point. When asked why he had given them a tour of the store, Petitioner Scott replied that he had just wanted them to see the store and laughed. He later said that Brown did not want any C-4 (SF 274-275, 283,284,296,297,312). On one occasion Scott did tell Wernette that he was thinking about selling the grocery store (SF 295) but at no time did Wernette ever discuss with Scott the blowing up of Petitioner Scott's store in Wills Point (SF 295,296).

Wernette admitted that in no recorded conversation was the word "dynamite" used although it was used in some conversation not recorded (SF 280,281). Petitioner Scott never said anything about wanting explosives or attempting to buy explosives (SF 282,310). When all conversations and contact between law enforcement authorities and Brown and Petitioner Scott were broken off, the store was still in business up until August 15, 1977, when it was destroyed by fire (SF 283,284). The last contact with Scott and Brown was on August 26, 1976.

Wernette stated that Brown never bought any explosives and never made a contract for Bowers' services to blow up any store (SF 317,318). Doris Jeffries, a special agent with the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Bureau, met Wernette, Petitioner Scott and Brown at Denney's in Dallas on August 3, 1976. Wernette and Brown left the restaurant at one point and then she and Petitioner Scott left. Petitioner Scott said that he was in the grocery business but would not be in it for long (SF 324), because it was too hard. She asked why Wernette and Brown went outside and Petitioner Scott stated that "they have got a big deal going" (SF 324).

Roger Bowers testified that on August 13, 1976, he met Brown and played the role of an expert explosives man; that he had a conversation with Brown regarding blowing up a store at Wills Point and that he wanted it done within a two month period on a Saturday or Sunday, at a price of $5,000.00 (SF 350-352). He and Wernette then went to the store and met Petitioner Scott.

On August 23, 1976, Bowers stated Petitioner Scott denied wanting anything to do with the explosives he was shown by Wernette and Bowers (SF 358-364). No money ever changed hands (SF 375); no explosives were ever bought or used (SF 376-379); and there was no further contact with Petitioner Scott and Brown after August 23, 1976.

On August 29, 1976, J.E. Tuma, a Dallas Fire Department official and arson investigator, investigated the fire which occurred August 15, 1977. The point of origin of the fire was the front of the store where a flammable liquid burn pattern was observed on the floor tile. Tuma took three samples, one which bore the odor of gas. The fire started via a low grade gas explosion caused when vapors accumulated and ignited. The fire was intentionally set (SF 493-498). There was no evidence of any dynamite explosion (SF 506,507). There was a football-sized hole in the front window and the point of the origin of the fire began fifteen feet away from this opening (SF 507-509). The fire was consistent with being lit with a match (SF 520). No gas container was found (SF 522).

REASON FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The Government Erred In Overruling Petitioner Scott's Motion For Judgment Of Acquittal In Count Two Of The Indictment, And As The Evidence Is Insufficient To Prove A Conspiracy As Alleged.

The Government must show a conspiracy by establishing an agreement between petitioner and Brown to act together in committing an offense and an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy, beyond a reasonable doubt. United States vs. Malatesta 590 F.2d 1379 (5th Circuit, 1979); United States vs. Isaacs 516 F.2d 409 (5th Circuit, 1975). The evidence of knowledge must be clear and not equivocal, and a suspicion however strong is insufficient. Causey vs. United States 352 F.2d 203 (5th Circuit, 1965); United States vs. Gutierrez 559 F.2d 1278 (5th Circuit, 1978).

There must be at least two participants in a conspiracy; one cannot conspire with himself. There must be some testimony from which it can be inferred that an agreement between two parties actually existed. Under no circumstances will guilt be inferred from mere association. United States vs. Thomas 468 F.2d 422 (10th Circuit, 1972); United States vs. Steele 469 F.2d 165 (10th Circuit, 1972); Evans vs. United States 257 F.2d 121 (9th Circuit, 1958); United States vs. Nall 437 F.2d 1177 (5th Circuit, 1977).

CONCLUSION

Petitioner submits that the evidence only shows Petitioner and Brown were friends and associates in a business venture, were seen together at the time of a conversation concerning dynamite at one point in time and that Federal undercover officers visited his store and that at the visit Petitioner's comments could be construed as those of one desiring to sell his store (as Petitioner did desire to do), and that when confronted for the very first time by the Federal agents with the dynamite and the suggestion of blowing up the store, Petitioner vehemently denied any knowledge or participation or agreement in the plan.

Petitioner submits that there is a complete absence of any proof to show an agreement and thus no evidence exists in the record to establish a conspiracy. The judgment of conviction should therefore be reversed and a judgment of acquittal entered.

For the reasons set for above, Petitioner respectfully submits that a Writ of Certiorari should issue to review the judgment and opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

APPENDIX

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS, FIFTH CIRCUIT.

No. 78-5345.

UNITED STATES of AMERICA,
Plaintiff-Appellee,

v.

JAMES E. BROWN and DAVID R. SCOTT,
Defendants-Appellants.

Oct. 9, 1979.

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas

Before TJOFLAT and VANCE, Circuit Judges, and ALLGOOD, District Judge.

VANCE, Circuit Judge:

This prosecution involves an alleged attempt and conspiracy by James E. Brown and David R. Scott during the summer of 1976 to have their grocery store in Wills Point, Texas, blown up. The events began in May 1976 when Scott sought information about purchasing untraceable explosives to blow up a building. A series of negotiations between Brown and undercover agents of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms concerning employment of an explosives expert to blow up the store ensued. The relevant sequence of events terminated on August 26, 1976, when contact between defendants and the undercover agents was broken off. Demolition of the store did not take place.

In December 1975, Brown and Scott borrowed approximately one hundred thousand dollars and purchased the store. They experienced cash flow problems, and their principal supplier put them on a cashier's check paying basis. In the summer of 1977 defendants agreed to sell the store including building, fixtures and merchandise to their store manager for one hundred five thousand dollars. On August 15, 1977, however, before the sale was closed, the store was totally destroyed by a fire that had been intentionally set. The identity of the arsonist has not been established. Scott filed a proof of loss claiming the full insurance coverage of one hundred sixty-five thousand dollars.

After the store was destroyed in the 1977 fire a federal grand jury returned indictments against defendants arising out of the 1976 events. Brown was charged in Count One with violating 18 U.S.C. § 844(i) by attempting to destroy by means of an explosive a building used in interstate commerce. In Count Two both defendants were charged with violating 18 U.S.C. § 371 by conspiring to destroy by means of an explosive a building used in interstate commerce. A jury found defendants guilty as charged.

On appeal they advance two challenges to the sufficiency of the evidence.[1] The first is whether the evidence established Brown's guilt of an attempt to blow up the building. The second concerns the sufficiency of the evidence of conspiracy particularly with respect to Scott. Familiar standards govern our review of both questions. We take the view of the evidence most favorable to the government, Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 62 S.Ct. 457, 86 L.Ed. 680 (1942), and we must sustain the denial of a motion for judgment of acquittal if a reasonable jury might decide that the evidence is inconsistent with every reasonable theory of defendants' innocence. United States v. Fredericks, 586 F.2d 470, 474 (5th Cir. 1978), cert. denied,

[1] We also reject Scott's complaint concerning the denial of his request for an instruction that his exculpatory statement must be disproved by the government. Scott relies on Grady v. State, 466 S.W.2d 770 (Tex.Cr.App.1971) for the holding that such an instruction is required under Texas state practice. The government concedes the existence of the state rule, but argues that it is subject to applicable exceptions. More importantly it points out that the rule is peculiar to the law of Texas and not binding on this court. See Annot., 116 A.L.R. 1460 (1938). Scott cites no precedent in which such an instruction is held to be mandatory by this or any other federal court.

_____ U.S. _____, 99 S.Ct. 1507, 59 L.Ed.2d 776 (1979); United States v. Warner, 441 F.2d 821, 825 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 404 U.S. 829, 92 S.Ct. 65, 30 L.Ed.2d 58 (1971).

I.

Brown does not contest that he had extensive conversations with A.T.F. undercover agents concerning blowing up the building. In fact he participated in five meetings and four telephone conversations. Many of the conversations were recorded, and the tapes were in evidence. Brown contends that this was nothing more than mere preparation and that preparation is not an attempt.

The meetings between Brown and A.T.F. agent Wernette began in Canton, Texas, on July 20, 1976, some two months after Scott first inquired about untraceable explosives. In an early meeting Brown asked the agent whether he had access to explosives and a man to use them. A few days later the agent told Brown he could get a man. Brown said he was willing to pay $5,000 and was interested in talking about it real soon.

At their next meeting ten days later in Dallas, Wernette told Brown that his man was interested. Brown described the building to be destroyed and told the agent it was at Wills Point, Texas. he told Wernette that it would have to be done at a certain time and that it was going to be an insurance deal. He mentioned an additional $25,000 in insurance. Brown told the agent the method he would use in blowing up the building, but said having someone else do it was worth $5,000 because it was so close to home.

On August 11, 1976, Brown told Wernette that he would like the explosives man to look at the building. He volunteered to show Wernette and the expert around the store, but said that in any case his partner would be at the store any time before 7:30 and that he would know more about the exact dimensions. Two days later Wernette introduced Brown to a second undercover agent, Bowers, who pretended to be the explosives man. Brown said the job should run around $5,000 and for that amount he would want the building flat level to the ground.

They discussed structural details, the amount of explosives needed, the time frame and the escape route to be used in leaving the building. Brown wanted the job done on a Saturday because it would be more profitable. Brown discussed procurement of the explosives with Bowers and agreed that if Bowers could come up with the explosives he would reimburse him. The two agents left to inspect the building. Brown had told Bowers that Wernette knew who to see when they arrived at the store. They went to the store and were shown around by Scott.

Three days later Brown and Wernette had a telephone conversation in which Wernette said that Bowers was willing to go ahead but that he still wanted something, referring to an advance of money for expenses. Brown said he thought that they were in agreement and confirmed that Bowers would be reimbursed for expenses in acquiring the explosives.

The last contact between the agents and Scott was on August 23, 1976. After that meeting no relevant events took place. No explosion occurred, and no money ever changed hands.

The question squarely presented by Brown on appeal is whether his conduct was sufficient to constitute an attempt or whether, as he contends, it was mere preparation. The problem of distinguishing preparation from an attempt under varying facts has caused recurring difficulty. The principles on which our resolution of the present problem will be based are found in United States v. Mandujano, 499 F.2d 370 (5th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1114, 95 S.Ct. 792, 42 L.Ed.2d 812 (1975), as refined by United States v. Oviedo, 525 F.2d 881 (5th Cir. 1976) and United States v. Rivero, 532 F.2d 450 (5th Cir. 1976). Rivero distills from Judge Rives' opinion in Mandujano the following formulation:

> First, the defendant must have been acting with the kind of culpability otherwise required for the commission of the crime which he is charged with attempting. . . .
> Second, the defendant must have engaged in conduct which constitutes a substantial step toward commission of the crime. A substantial step must be conduct strongly corroborative of the firmness of the defendant's criminal intent.

532 F.2d at 455 (quoting 499 F.2d at 376) Oviedo emphasizes the requirement that > the objective acts performed, without any reliance on the accompanying mens rea, mark[ed] the defendant's conduct as criminal in nature.

525 F.2d at 885.

Brown's conduct clearly met the first of the stated Mandujano tests. Our consideration at this point focuses on the second. Did Brown's conduct include the taking of such a substantial step that it crossed the line from mere preparation? Did it strongly corroborate the firmness of his criminal intent and make his conduct criminal in nature? We conclude that it did in each of two particulars.

In Mandujano the court used the American Law Institute's Model Penal Code in its analysis and quoted from it at some length. 499 F.2d at 377 n. 6. Immediately subsequent to quoted portions the Code also contains the following:

> Without negativing the sufficiency of other conduct, the following, if strongly corroborative of the actor's criminal purpose, shall not be held insufficient as a matter of law:
> (c) reconnoitering the place contemplated for the commission of the crime.
> (f). . . collection . . . of materials to be employed in the commission of the crime, at or near the place contemplated for its commission, where such . . . collection . . . serves no lawful purpose of the actor under the circumstances . . . .

Model Penal Code § 5.01 (Proposed Official Draft 1962).

Viewed as we must view it on appeal, the evidence shows that Brown (1) made a firm agreement with Bowers for acquisition of the explosives needed to blow up the store and (2) dispatched Wernette and Bowers to reconnoiter and inspect the building in preparation for its destruction. In both instances he engaged in conduct that met the second Mandujano test. We, therefore, conclude that the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's finding that he was guilty of an attempt.

II.

Scott correctly contends that, wholly aside from Brown's attempt, his guilt depends on proof that a conspiracy existed, that he knew about it and that he voluntarily joined it. He points out that suspicion is not enough and that his guilt will not be inferred from mere association with Brown.

Although the evidence may be circumstantial, it must prove Scott's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Scott concedes in brief that, if existence of a conspiracy were shown, evidence of his connection might be slight. After the filing of Scott's brief, however, this court sitting en banc repudiated the so-called slight evidence rule. United States v. Malatesta, 590 F.2d 1379 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, _____ U.S. _____, 99 S.Ct. 1508, 59 L.Ed.2d 777 (1979). Even prior to Malatesta, the government could derive no benefit from the slight evidence rule since Scott's connection was necessary to the very existence of the two-man conspiracy. That connection must have been proved beyond a reasonable doubt for the conviction of either defendant under Count Two to stand.

The evidence against Scott begn with his inquiries about untraceable dynamite for use in blowing up a place about the size of a building at Brown's father's place of business. Immediately before the inquiry he was seen with Brown. Scott was Brown's partner in a grocery enterprise that the jury could have concluded was in financial difficulty. Scott handled the insurance for the partnership and placed enough coverage on the store so that the amount of the insurance exceeded by sixty thousand dollars the amount for which they later agreed to sell the business. Scott accompanied Brown to the August 3, 1976, meeting with undercover agent Wernette, who was accompanied by agent Doris Jefferies. When Brown and Wernette went outside for their discussion, Scott told Doris Jefferies that he was in the grocery business but would not be for long. She asked Scott why Brown and Wernette went outside, and Scott replied that they had a big deal going.

Finally, when Wernette and Bowers were sent by Brown to the store to inspect the building, they were met by Scott who stated that he had been expecting them. There was no discussion about blowing it up, but the tour of the store conducted by Scott included the structural features of the building, the location of the back door, and things that Brown and the agents had discussed as things that the bomber would need to know.

Scott relies heavily on his meeting with the agents on August 23, 1976, when they showed him what they described as explosives. Scott denied any interest in them. Wernette asked Scott why he had shown the agents around the store. Laughing, Scott remarked that he thought they might like to see it. Before this court Scott argues that the conversation contained exculpatory statements. Because the conversation was recorded both the jury and this court have heard it. From the conversations's content, Scott's tone of voice and his inflection the jury may well have determined as we do that, aside from the naked words, Scott's statement did not convey an impression of innocence.[2]

[2] The jury may have concluded that Scott's manner of speaking, inflection and tone of voice were incompatible with the literal meaning of the words used and, indeed, conveyed the opposite meaning. Weinstein says of Federal Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2), "The rule makes no attempt to categorize the myriad ways in which a party . . . may make an admission. Admissions can be made expressly or may be inferred from conduct." Weinstein's Evidence 801(d)(2)(A)[01] at 801-118 (1978). Among the supporting authorities cited is our opinion in United States v. Nakaladski, 481 F.2d 289, 300-301 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1064, 94 S.Ct. 570, 38 L.Ed.2d 469 (1973), holding that a smile constituted an admission. If the jury concluded that the exculpatory words used by Scott were false, they could have regarded the statement itself as tending to show consciousness of guilt. Wilson v. United States, 162 U.S. 613, 16 S.Ct. 895, 40 L.Ed. 1090 (1896); United States v. Sutherland, 463 F.2d 641 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1078, 93 S.Ct. 698, 34 L.Ed.2d 668 (1972); United States v. Rajewski, 526 F.2d 149 (7th Cir. 1975), cert. denied, 426 U.S. 908, 96 S.Ct. 2231, 48 L.Ed.2d 833 (1976); United States v. Matousek, 483 F.2d 286 (8th Cir. 1973). In Rajewski the court said, "It is well settled that untrue exculpatory statements may be considered as circumstantial evidence of the defendant's consciousness of guilt." 526 F.2d at 158.

We conclude as this court did in Rodriguez v. United States, 373 F.2d 17, 18 (5th Cir. 1967), that, although Scott may have exercised circumspection and restraint in dealing with the A.T.F. agents, the evidence demonstrates a great deal more than mere association with Brown. Entirely disregarding Brown's declarations that linked Scott to the alleged conspiracy, there was ample independent evidence from which a jury could exclude every reasonable hypothesis other than Scott's active, knowledgeable participation as part and parcel of his partner's scheme.

AFFIRMED.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON PETITIONS FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FIFTH CIRCUIT

MEMORANDUM FOR THE UNITED STATES IN OPPOSITION

Petitioners contend that the evidence at trial was insufficient to support their convictions.

1. Following a jury trial in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Texas, petitioners Scott and Brown were convicted of conspiring to destroy a building used in interstate commerce by means of an explosive, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 371. Petitioner Brown was also convicted of attempting to destroy a building used in interstate commerce by means of an explosive, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 844(i). Petitioner Scott was sentenced to four years' imprisonment; petitioner Brown was sentenced to concurrent four-year terms of imprisonment on the two counts on which he was convicted. The court of appeals affirmed (Pet. App. 1a-8a).[1]

The evidence at trial is summarized in the opinion of the court of appeals. In brief, the evidence showed the following: In May 1976, petitioner Scott began making inquiries about purchasing untraceable dynamite to blow up a building. Between May and August of 1976, petitioners negotiated with two undercover agents of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in an effort to hire an explosives expert to blow up the building, which housed a store owned by petitioners (Pet. App. 1a). The demolition never took place, and contact between petitioners and the agents was broken off in August of 1976 (ibid.). A year later, the building was destroyed by a fire that had been intentionally set. The identity of the arsonist was never established. Petitioner Scott later filed an insurance claim of $165,000 for the loss of the building (id. at 2a). Petitioners were subsequently indicted in connection with their conduct in 1976.

2. Both petitioners contend that the evidence was insufficient to support their convictions of conspiring to destroy the building by means of explosives. In particular, they contend that the evidence was insufficient to show that Scott participated in the scheme with Brown.[2] The evidence rebuts this claim.

[1]"Pet. App." refers to the appendix in No. 79-1121.

[2]The conspiracy alleged and proved was, of course, between petitioner Brown and petitioner Scott. There was no allegation that petitioners conspired with the undercover agents.

As noted by the court of appeals, after petitioner Scott had sought information about obtaining untraceable explosives, petitioner Brown dealt extensively with the ATF agents in arranging for the demolition of the building that housed their store. Brown asked one of the agents, Agent Wernette, whether he could find an explosives expert who would be willing to blow up the building, and when the agent said he could, Brown offered to pay $5000 for the service. Brown described the building to be destroyed and set a date for its destruction, noting that it was being destroyed for insurance purposes. Brown offered to show the explosives expert around the store or to have his partner, petitioner Scott, show him around the store (Pet. App. 3a).

Agent Wernette introduced Brown to another ATF agent, Agent Bowers, who posed as the explosives expert. Brown told Agent Bowers that he would pay about $5000 for the job and that he wanted the building to be totally destroyed (Pet. App. 31). As the court of appeals noted, Brown laid out the scheme to Bowers in great detail (id. at 4a):

> They discussed structural details, the amount of explosives needed, the time frame and the escape route to be used in leaving the building. Brown wanted the job done on a Saturday because it would be more profitable. Brown discussed procurement of the explosives with Bowers and agreed that if Bowers could come up with the explosives he would reimburse him. The two agents left to inspect the building. Brown had told Bowers that Wernette knew who to see when they arrived at the store. They went to the store and were shown around by Scott.

Petitioner Brown later spoke again with Agent Wernette and confirmed that he wanted Agent Bowers to go ahead with the demolition. He added that he would reimburse Bowers for his expenses in acquiring the explosives (Pet. App. 4a). Agent Bowers, however, did not destroy the building, and the parties broke off their contact several weeks later (ibid.).

The court of appeals properly held that the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's conclusion that petitioners had conspired to have the building destroyed. The evidence of Scott's participation in the conspiracy included the following: (1) Scott inquired about locating untraceable dynamite to blow up a building; (2) Scott and Brown were partners in a business that was having financial difficulties; (3) Scott handled the insurance for the partnership and insured the store for an amount well in excess of its apparent value; (4) Scott accompanied Brown to a meeting with ATF agents and mentioned to one of them that he was in the grocery business but would not be for long; and (5) Scott gave agents Wernette and Bowers a tour of the building in which he showed them the structural features of the building, including the various features that Brown and the agents had discussed as things that the bomber would have to know (Pet. App. 6a-7a). This evidence, including the taped conversation between the agents and petitioner Scott, provides ample support for the jury's conclusion that Scott was in league with Brown in their efforts to have the building destroyed. The conspiracy count was therefore properly upheld.

3. Petitioner Brown also challenges his conviction for attempting to destroy the building, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 844(i) (79-1122 Pet. 8-13). He contends that his conduct constituted no more than mere preparation and did not cross the line between preparation and attempt.

Initially, we note that petitioner Brown received concurrent sentences on his convictions for conspiracy and attempt. Reversal of his conviction on the attempt charge would not affect either his total sentence or his parole eligibility. Accordingly, under the concurrent sentence doctrine there is no need for this Court to review petitioner Brown's challenge to his conviction for attempt. See Andresen v. Maryland, 427 U.S. 463, 469 n.4 (1976); Barnes v. United States, 412 U.S. 837, 848 n.16 (1973).

In any event, for the reasons given by the court of appeals, petitioner Brown's conviction for attempt was properly upheld. To commit attempt the defendant must (i) act with the degree of culpability otherwise required for the commission of the crime and (ii) engage in a "substantial step toward commission of the crime." See United States v. Mandujano, 499 F. 2d 370, 376 (5th Cir. 1974); United States v. Rivero, 532 F. 2d 450, 455 (5th Cir. 1976). Petitioner does not object to the instructions given by the court in this case, and in light of those instructions, the only question is whether the evidence was sufficient to convict under this standard. Petitioner plainly had the requisite intent. As the court of appeals noted (Pet. App. 5a), petitioner also had taken substantial steps toward the effectuation of the bombing, and those steps strongly corroborated the firmness of his criminal purpose. He had made a firm agreement with Agent Bowers for the acquisition of the explosives to blow up the store, and he had described in detail how he wanted the job done and how much he would be willing to pay. In addition, he sent the agents to the store to reconnoiter the building in order to determine how best to destroy it. The jury was entitled to find that these substantial steps in the criminal enterprise went beyond mere preparation and constituted an attempt. See United States v. Stallworth, 543 F. 2d 1038 (2d Cir. 1976).

It is therefore respectfully submitted that the petition for a writ of certiorari should be denied.
